Without enlarging on the advice usually given to dwellers in glass bouses, I proceed emphatically to deny your charge of disingenuousness, I said ut the Meeting that I believed the demand to be unconstitutional, and, when the necessity areas. I proved that I was right. The necessity was produced by your own assertions that the question as to Troops being required in Hengkong was "heside the point" that startling doctrine, which no one, within my knowledge, has perviously monted, throw upon the promoters of the undertaking the opus of domonstrating that the motion is valued—a vast over estimate we should ther Country has no right to claim what Her Majesty's Government may choose to call Surplus tevenue except as a return for the performance of indispensable services. This had previously been assumed as a postulate in our argument but on the soundars of the postulate the value of the arguments necessarily depends. You alone disputed the latter, and then, for the first time, it became a duty to substantiate the former. No more was it "puorile and absurd" to shew cause why the Colory should be exempted from

The peremptory tone that has been hesumed by Her Mujesty's Government throughout this matter was surely sufficient rea son for addraing every argument that could be brought to bear against their measures. The uppaid services which the Colony renders Imparial interests, and the enormous expenses under which both the native population and many foreigners of limited income grown, are weighty considerations and should make Her Majesty's
